STOLE HIS WARDROBE

Midnight Prowler Visits Charles Bon.

A MOSQUITO NET PREVENTS CAPTURE

Fear of Being Shot Halts Thief But There Was No Revolver.

Charles Bon, a clerk in the bank of Bishop & Co., imagined himself in the role of Ajax defying the lightning shortly after midnight yesterday morning, when he discovered a bold, bad burglar in the act of leaving his room, in the house of Mr. Jacobson, on Pensacola street. The mosquito netting covering the bank clerk's head, and the lack of a revolver, combined to defeat Mr. Bon in his attempt to capture the thief, who had the temerity to take away the bank clerk's coat, pants, a pair of suspenders, various articles of nether wear, a brand new pair of shoes, a gold watch and $7 in cash. Mr. Bon was chagrined that the burglar failed to take away a very fine belt which lay in plain sight. He trusts that the man who hypothesized his wardrobe will renew his visit to the house and take the belt, as it was a part of the suit he wore.

Mr. Bon occupied a room with two doors, one of them a lattice door opening out upon the front lanai. He was awakened by a movement of a chair in the room, and upon opening his eyes saw, by the dim gleam of a night lamp on a table, the retreating form of a man in the act of leaving the room by the lattice door. Time was short, and with a leap and a shout Mr. Bon attempted to jump into the middle of the room. The mosquito netting was nicely tucked in, and the bank clerk became entangled in it. The net came down, and for a few seconds Mr. Bon struggled to free himself from its folds. He shouted to the burglar to stop where he was or he would shoot.

"Stop where you are, thief, or I will fill you with leaden pellets," was Mr. Bon's demand. What surprised Mr. Bon was that the thief actually did stop, and looked around to see what kind of a gun was levelled at him. What he saw was a pajama-clad man just emerging from a snowy mass of mosquito netting, and no revolver in sight. The burglar gave utterance to a grunt, and without dropping the bundle, as Mr. Bon expected and hoped he would do, he tripped lightly down the steps and passed quickly out of the yard by the front gate. What a triumphed bank clerk made an inventory he found the suit he had worn that evening had disappeared, with the exception of the belt.

"I had a splendid view of the fellow's back, but I don't think I can identify him by that," said Mr. Bon yesterday to a reporter. "He was not a large man, and may have been a Porto Rican, but I can't say as to that. I am sorry that he did not take that belt along, as it properly belongs to the suit he so generously availed himself of. I was about to send this advertisement to the Advertiser, as the belt only goes with that one suit."

WANTED—Will the gentleman who saw another gentleman in a front room of residence on Pensacola street, at midnight, January 15, please call again, as he forgot the belt which belongs to the suit that he removed, and pay for this advertisement.

"I am under the impression that the door which I found open was securely locked. All the man had to do was to insert his fingers through the lattice work and release the latch. He must have entered while an electric car was coming down the street, and he must have made noise enough to drown out all other sounds. In leaving the room he evidently struck a chair, and that awoke me. I did not have a revolver when called out to him to stop, but I expected he would drop the bundle. I miscalculated the strength of the string which held up the mosquito netting, as it came down in a heap about me, and that gave the burglar a chance to get away."
